A truly great board of trade is one that embraces its community and works to contribute in all facets of its health and sustainable growth. The Burnaby Board of Trade has been a part of this city for over a hundred years, and in that time we have established ourselves as much more than just Burnaby's economic development agency. We have cultivated a triple bottom line philosophy, and we work daily with partners from every segment of the community to come up with innovative and progressive ideas for the benefit of our membership and every citizen who calls Burnaby home.

Through our several committees we challenge ourselves and our membership to consider the bigger picture. We build the business case through well-considered research, demonstrating how issues of social and environmental sustainability directly influence economic prosperity. Our end goal is to equip Burnaby businesses with every competitive advantage possible, so that they are well prepared to face the challenges and uncertainty of a changing economic landscape.

The recent addition of our new Economic Development Committee will allow us to look at economic issues on a broader scale, while leveraging partnerships to address specific areas of concern, and bring insight, awareness and action to issues important to our business community.

Of course, along with our ambitious advocacy efforts, we must never forget our commitment to creating true value for our membership. Our organizational focus continues to be providing engagement and networking opportunities along with important benefits and services to the 1,000+ businesses and organizations we represent.

There's more than one route to recycle your containers

Thanks to BC residents, about 80% of beverage containers sold in the province are recovered and recycled into something new. In 2012, that was close to one billion containers kept out of landfills.

By Sandy Sigmund
Vice President, Development & CMO
Encorp Pacific (Canada)

Encorp Pacific (Canada) is one of North America's leading not-for-profit product stewardship corporations. With a mandate to develop and manage a consumer-friendly, cost-effective system to recover end-of-life products and packaging for recycling, Encorp's recycling network is extensive, and stretches across the province.

Probably best known for the Return-It™ System, Encorp's recycling network includes over 170 Return-It™ Depots in BC. Each depot is independently owned, often family-operated, and provides business and employment opportunities for communities across the province. As the cornerstones of the Return-It™ System, these depots are known by 85% of BC residents, and are the most common way that a beverage container is returned for recycling into the system. Conveniently, many Return-It™ Depots also accept a variety of other stewardship products, including electronics, small appliances, paint and more. More information about what's accepted where can be found at return-it.ca/locations.

To ensure customers get the best possible recycling experience, Encorp has taken steps to modernize

Panorama Village Return-It, 5-Star location, Surrey, BC

There are over 170 Return-It™ Depots in BC. Find them at return-it.ca/locations depots by creating 3 & 5 Star Depot Programs. Depots certified in the program must meet specific standards for service, cleanliness, design and convenience. Today's depots are clean, bright and open, with large sorting tables. Nearly every customer (94%) who's recently visited a depot is satisfied with the experience.

While beverage containers can still be returned to any retailer in BC, their returns only represent 7% of the total collected. Return-It™ Depots collect the vast majority of containers, and are part of a comprehensive recycling network.

For hotels, office buildings, restaurants, other businesses and multi-family buildings, many Return-It™

Depots and specialized mobile collectors offer a pick-up program, primarily provided within the Vancouver area. Independent contractors will pick-up used containers and take them to Return-It™ collection facilities. If you live in a townhouse, condominium or apartment, look for the Encorp or Return-It™ branded collection bins installed in your garbage and recycling area.

If you live in a residence where municipal pickup is available, you can leave containers for curbside pickup – be aware, though, that the type of containers accepted will vary based on your municipality. It's always best to check with your local municipality to confirm what's acceptable and what isn't.

For recycling 'on the go', you may have noticed that Encorp has installed 60 new beverage container recycling bins in the City of Vancouver. These bins are non-locking and designed to be self-serviced by residents or people wanting to receive the deposit refund attached to each container.

Around 176 bear-proof recycling bins can also be found in approximately 14 BC parks. The parks receive the deposit refunds and most proceeds are given to their chosen charities. To date, more than $75,000 in deposit refunds have been provided to BC Parks.

Also, Encorp has been running a School Recycling Program since 2000. BC elementary and high schools can register and compete against one another to collect the most recyclable containers. Not only do schools get to keep the deposit refunds, but cash prizes are awarded to the schools that collect the most containers per student. To date, schools have recycled almost 37 million containers and received over $2.2 million in deposit refunds.

Recent research shows that 92% of BC residents know of a place to return beverage containers to receive their deposit refund.

Who foots the bill?

Encorp is 100% industry operated and receives no government funding. They combine private sector efficiencies with a high degree of transparency to manage these various recycling programs.

With BC's growing recycling networks, recycling couldn't be easier. Look for a Return-It™ Depot or recycling bin near you, and keep your recyclable products in the system and out of the landfill.

The goal of any board of trade or chamber of commerce is to grow so that it might better serve its local business community and ever increase the value of membership. Over the last couple of years, I'm proud to say that the Burnaby Board of Trade has indeed grown, and so too have our program, event, service and benefit offerings.

This year we have leveraged new partnerships to offer more member benefits, such as a free full-year subscription to Business in Vancouver magazine, and lower transaction costs with First Data Canada. We have also expanded our efforts to remain relevant in an increasingly diverse business community by offering new events designed to appeal to individuals from all cultural and ethnic backgrounds.

Of course, relevance applies not only in our appeal to a multicultural business community, but also in our ability to engage with the young professionals representing tomorrow's business leaders and entrepreneurs. Our Access: Student Career Development Program, first launched one year ago, has put us in a unique position to help a new generation make the transition into their professional life. As we embark upon our second year of the program, we will welcome even greater numbers of eager post-secondary students ready to soak up all the wisdom our Connectors, speakers, and leaders have to offer.

I am also very proud of what our board of trade has managed to accomplish on behalf of our membership in the areas of social and environmental sustainability. Through our partnership with the City of Burnaby, we are heavily involved in the implementation of Burnaby's Social Sustainability Strategy and in the formation of the forthcoming Environmental Sustainability Strategy. In addition, our recently launched Pledge for a Sustainable Community web resource continues to grow, and already over one hundred businesses from across the Lower Mainland have pledged to reduce their environmental impact, share successes and serve as role models. Our goal now is to expand the Pledge, increase our numbers and engage businesses not only locally, but across B.C. and beyond.

Ultimately, a strong board of trade is one that has the full support of its members. We rely on our membership to carry out our role as the city's economic development agency, and to lend a united voice in advocating on matters of importance to the Burnaby business community. Together we ensure that the BBOT can continue to offer great value for the programs, services and benefits that allow businesses to succeed.

Some of you may have noticed that this year's team photo features the same people as last year. A key reason we have been able to develop and execute the many events, member benefit partnerships and new programs this past year is the continuity, knowledge and commitment provided by the BBOT team. I would like to express my sincere thanks to each of them for their hard work and determination to deliver the very best value to our members and for helping make the BBOT a leader and innovator in the business community.

Thank you all for your continued support.

A trip through the changing landscape of METROTOWN, LOUGHEED, EDMONDS and BRENTWOOD — four distinct, sustainable neighbourhoods that weave together to form the City of Burnaby. BY TIFFANY SLOAN

From abundant green space and urban amenities to affordability, business-friendly policies and a proud sense of community, those who live and work in Burnaby have a lot to be thankful for.

It's no matter of luck. Rather, it's the faithful build-out of the strategic plan developed by the City in the 1970s. "Given Burnaby's proximity to downtown Vancouver, it didn't make sense to have one central business district for Burnaby," explains Johannes Schumann, a community planner with the City of Burnaby. "So it was envisioned to have four individual town centres that met the needs of each of the four quadrants of the city, each one being a complete community that has office, multi-family residential, commercial and proximate industrial uses supporting it, and each serviced by a rapid-transit hub."

SETTING AN EXAMPLE OF SUSTAINABLE GROWTH

By decentralizing Burnaby's "downtown," the City and local developers have been able to focus on building up density, providing an urban experience to a greater number of residents and businesses.

Today, those four town centres – Metrotown, Lougheed, Edmonds and Brentwood – have emerged as unique, individual communities that draw their identity from the surrounding social and environmental amenities and the people who live there, explains Schumann. In addition to the overarching plan for the city as a region, each town centre has its own community plan that caters to its particular social, economic and environmental needs.

Burnaby has already succeeded in realizing its vision of dense, mixed-use, rapid-transit-oriented, regional town centres, says Gordon Price, director of Simon Fraser University's City Program. Now, the city is reinforcing that fundamental vision and adding value to the communities through continual redevelopment – redevelopment that is carefully guided by the City's social, economic and environmental strategies for sustainable growth.

"Our social sustainability strategy looks at how we can further the goals and social benefits of residents and employees in this city," explains Schumann, pointing to the efficacy of the City's density bonusing program, which allows developments higher levels of density in exchange for building amenities needed by the community.

The city's economic strategy focuses on encouraging economic investment in Burnaby by making the city an attractive and convenient location for new and current businesses. To that end, public transit is a powerful economic tool, says Price, who praises Burnaby for effectively negotiating SkyTrain development, building up density around each of the stations and creating a framework for businesses to fit into. Adds Price, "Burnaby really is the poster child for transit-oriented development because it's done so much of it."

And of course, transit-oriented development is a key element of the City's environmental strategy, currently under development. More than just increasing park areas, the strategy is about building greener buildings and making it easier for people to adopt a greener lifestyle, such as recycling and commuting by bike or transit, says Schumann.

Burnaby's unwavering focus on sustainability has paid off in spades. In 2013, the city retains its status as a home to knowledge-based companies (Electronic Arts is a longtime resident) and a major supporter of small business. In his annual state of the city address this past April, Mayor Derek Corrigan noted that building permits for 2013 had already exceeded $325 million, a significant increase over last year. Additionally, Burnaby's 2012 year-end financial statements report an increase in net financial assets of nearly $51 million.

With this wealth of resources, the city's quadrants are undergoing significant development and, in some cases, a restructuring that will accommodate more businesses and residents while improving livability.

"AAA" class office buildings in Metro Vancouver.

Equal attention is being paid to creating new standards of livability. Burnaby's first pedestrian "art walk" is taking shape along Beresford Street. As well, Central Park has undergone an extensive lighting upgrade, and the Terry Fox Trail of Hope is now open to walkers and joggers. Meanwhile, a new activity centre for 55-plus adults was made possible by Burnaby's density bonus policy; this much-needed facility is part of Polygon Home's Chancellor development.

The 1891 construction of the Central Park tramline ran through what is today's Metrotown core and made the area a central focus for development – just as the Expo SkyTrain line facilitated modern Metrotown's sustained urban growth.

LOUGHEED

Many people associate Burnaby with Simon Fraser University, and this iconic seat of higher learning is located in the largest of the city's quadrants, Lougheed. Despite its size, Lougheed Town Centre (which has traditionally fuelled a mall-based economy) has experienced limited growth in recent years, but activity in 2013 will soon transform it into a more efficient, high-density region. The elements that could constitute the densification are under discussion by city planners and Shape Properties.

Despite Lougheed's comparatively limited growth, the quadrant distinguishes itself by being home to what has been called a Canadian model for practical and affordable sustainability: UniverCity, adjacent to SFU. Initially envisioned by architects Arthur Erickson and Geoff Massey when developing SFU in 1963, the award-winning UniverCity is a dense, mixed-use community on 65 hectares that will ultimately be home to 10,000 residents and contain two distinct neighbourhoods, each with its own elementary school and park, plus a commercial core, community facilities and an extensive network of trails.

Lougheed developed initially because of its position on North Road, the oldest road in Metro Vancouver.

EDMONDS

Edmonds is the historical heart of Burnaby, home to its original commercial core and first streetcar line. Today it houses the head offices of BC Hydro and still boasts a strong community of longstanding family-owned-and-operated businesses. It's also the most ethnically diverse of the four town centres, and the greenest – green space comprises approximately one-third of this quadrant's land area.

"There hasn't been much economic investment in Edmonds over the last 30 years, but the City has invested a lot of money to help revitalize the area – a new fire hall, a new library and a fantastic new community centre," says Schumann. "It's poised to take off in terms of business growth and the development of community amenities and new residential communities."

A "gateway" to the quadrant is being developed by Crescey Developments in the form of a mixed-use residential/office tower. The recently completed Edmonds Community Centre and Edmonds Park serve as a communal gathering spot as well as a destination for special events. Additionally, plans are afoot to turn 48 acres of land into a pedestrian-oriented, transit-connected neighbourhood that will enhance the town centre.

As with other Burnaby quadrants, growth in Edmonds is not merely in the form of new buildings. Although Edmonds' Big Bend area has stimulated job growth due to its retail, commercial and industrial components, its agricultural zone is being protected and city planners are currently determining ways of opening up the Fraser River waterfront to increased recreational use.

Edmonds was the historical population centre for south Burnaby and the site of the very first Burnaby City Hall, at Edmonds and Kingsway.

BRENTWOOD

Among Brentwood's many claims to fame are its internationally renowned movie and television studios, but thanks to careful planning, the quadrant (historically an industrial and commercial mecca) is evolving into a high-density residential community appealing to young families and first-time homebuyers. "It's a really exciting area because it's developing quite quickly into a really young and vibrant community with a very engaged population," says Schumann.

Because Brentwood's residential growth is relatively recent (beginning in the 1980s) establishing community amenities to support residential development is key. To that end, the redevelopment of Brentwood Town Centre site by Shape Properties is a massive project that consists of centring retail and commercial spaces around a winding main street – a thoroughfare that will connect to residences and public spaces as well as transit. This new urban hub will be augmented by the new Solo District and Vantage residential developments, both of which include public spaces and much-needed amenities such as non-profit office space thanks to Burnaby's density bonusing.

Lougheed Highway, which cuts through the Brentwood quadrant, is also getting a makeover: while the flow and density of traffic remains the same, flourishes such as benches, street-side greenery and rain gardens are making this major thoroughfare more appealing to pedestrians.

Elsewhere in Brentwood, the North Burnaby neighbourhoods of The Heights and Capitol Hill have been singled out for commercial, entertainment and living opportunities.

Brentwood Town Centre's characteristic white domes and peaks were designed to imitate the snow-capped North Shore Mountains in the background.

Burnaby is booming, "and as the population grows, there's a stronger base for employment and investment," says Schumann, noting the City's concerted efforts to balance growth among residential, commercial retail and commercial office space development. "One thing that marks the difference between Burnaby and say, Richmond, North Van or Vancouver, where you have very tight commercial markets: in Burnaby you can still find space to start or expand your business," says Schumann, emphasizing that these growth opportunities lie in centrally located sites already well served by transit, shopping, recreational and public amenities. "There's always room to grow in Burnaby." ■

Solo District

METROTOWN

The largest and most well entrenched of Burnaby's four town centres is also its most urban. Thanks to a strong residential base dating back more than 50 years, Metrotown has developed the greatest number of amenities and transportation links – establishing it as a regional town centre for the entire city.

Station Square development

Already home to three skyscraper office towers as well as anchoring businesses like Telus's corporate offices and Rogers Communications' call centre operations, Metrotown is now in the midst of massive development and redevelopment that will reshape the overall appearance of the district and bolster its standing as Burnaby's commercial epicentre.

Station Square, a joint venture by Anthem Developments and Beedie Development Group, is one such project. Previously a shopping centre, it has been rezoned for an urban master-planned development that includes 1.6 million square feet of residential, 300,000 square feet of retail and 150,000 square feet of office space. Nearby, the urban village of Royal Oak is growing at a fast pace with numerous townhouse and low-rise mixed-use developments under construction. And Metrotower III beside the Metrotown SkyTrain station, scheduled for completion mid-2014, will be one of the first LEED Platinum

The Value of Membership

Derek Corrigan – Mayor of Burnaby, City of Burnaby
www.burnaby.bc.ca

“The City of Burnaby is fortunate to be home to an extremely progressive, collaborative, innovative Board of Trade. Our ongoing work with the Board ensures Burnaby is well positioned to seize business opportunities, locally and internationally. Together, we are developing valuable, productive relationships globally with friendship and sister cities. And, of course, while our relationship with the Board of Trade extends to international partnerships, it begins here in Burnaby. Through the Board and its members, the City stays in touch with business. It’s a great relationship that allows us to keep our finger on the pulse of the City’s business community. The Burnaby Board of Trade does exemplary work that ensures all Burnaby businesses are supported for local and global success.”

Holly Renaud – Account Executive
SW AUDIO VISUAL
www.sw-online.com

Coming up on our first anniversary with the Burnaby Board of Trade, and what a year it has been! I would recommend joining to any Burnaby business owner. The BBOT’s networking and social events have helped generate solid leads and sales revenue, while the educational seminars offer useful and proactive tools for every business type looking to improve sustainability, social networking strategies and much more. For me, it has been the people that have made this experience most enjoyable. The BBOT team is always available to offer support, to answer questions, and to have fun. Being new to the company, to B.C., and to Burnaby, I’ve made some great friends in a short time and had some new and exciting experiences (night skiing at Mt. Seymour, for one!). Thank you to the BBOT for welcoming us into the community!

Denise Haskett
Community Leader/Executive Director
L’Arche Greater Vancouver
www.larchevancouver.org

When we joined the BBOT six years ago, very few people knew about L’Arche, even though we’d been actively engaged in the community and serving adults with developmental disabilities in Burnaby for over 30 years. Our membership put us on the map, and through various events we’ve connected with supporters, sponsors and board members. The Board continues to offer opportunities that keep us current with civic and business affairs, which is vital for a not-for-profit organization. BBOT’s events, membership services and exemplary staff greatly increase our capacity for growth.

Maureen Kirkbride
Director – Government Relations,
www.telus.com

TELUS is proud to be a Burnaby Board of Trade member. Belonging to the BBOT helps us connect and build relationships with local business and community leaders, while innovative BBOT programs like the Pledge for a Sustainable Community provide us with the opportunity to play a positive role in the community.

Mike Kearne – President
HollyNorth Production Supplies Ltd.
www.hollynorth.com

There are many benefits attached to a BBOT membership, many that we feel are worthwhile to any small business. For HollyNorth, it gives our business an advocate and opportunity to voice our concerns to all levels of government. We enjoy being a part of the local business community and attending some of the many great networking events and seminars provided by the Burnaby Board of Trade. We are especially proud to be one of the first Burnaby businesses to have taken the BBOT Pledge for a Sustainable Community.
